4- User Data Access Policy

Users are required to enter home stock and medicine-related information to use the core features of the Ghar Stock app. The data entered by users—such as shopping list names, item names, quantities, units, categories, prices, storage places, purchase dates, expiry dates, family member names and relations, medicine names, dose amounts, pill counts, dose schedules, dose history, notes, and dates—is used solely to provide the basic functionality of the app.

This information allows the app to display and manage shopping lists, which items have been bought, home pantry stock, items that are expired or expiring soon, today’s medicine doses for each family member, taken and skipped doses, pills left and low pill alerts, monthly grocery spending reports, local backup files, and a detailed history of previous records so users can track their home stock, groceries and family medicines over time.

We collect user data strictly to enable these core features. We do not use, share, or sell user data to third parties for personal or commercial purposes. The data is used exclusively to deliver the requested functionality within the app.

All user-entered data is stored securely on the user's device and remains under the user's control. Users can view, edit, or delete their data at any time. Uninstalling the app or clearing app data will permanently remove all stored records.

The app does not request unnecessary permissions. Any required access is limited to ensuring proper functionality and a transparent user experience.

5- Collected Data

All collected data is securely encrypted and stored on protected servers with appropriate technical safeguards in place to prevent unauthorised access.

- Usage

The data is never shared with third parties. It is used solely for the intended purpose of identifying and notifying users about available app updates.

In compliance with evolving Google Play policies, we explicitly request user consent within the App before activating any feature that requires access to this data. Users will only be able to use the software update feature after granting this permission.
